Welcome to 2019 Food Law Student Leadership Summit!

We are thrilled to have you in Washington, D.C.—the hub of federal government and politics. Here, you will have the opportunity to engage with some of the nation's most passionate and accomplished food law scholars, students and practitioners. Georgetown University Law Center's O'Neill Institute for National and Global Health Law, Harrison Institute for Public Law, and the Global Health Justice Alliance are proud to partner with the Harvard Law School Food Law and Policy Clinic and the National Food Law Student Network to host the 2019 Summit, building on the inaugural summit held at Harvard Law School in 2015 and two subsequent Summits across the country.

The O'Neill Institute for National and Global Health Law's work rests upon the premise that the law has been, and will remain, a fundamental tool for solving critical health problems in our local, national, and global communities. The Harrison Institute for Public Law supports actors who make and shape policy, working with nonprofit coalitions, legislators, attorneys general, local governments, national associations, and global policy networks. The Global Health Justice Alliance strives to create an equitable society, where everyone has the opportunity to thrive and contribute to an integrated and supportive community, through advocacy for fair access to health and justice resources. The Harvard Law School Food Law and Policy Clinic is the oldest law school clinic in the country dedicated to addressing the health, environmental, and economic consequences of the laws and policies that govern our food system. Together, we are thrilled to see the strong and growing interest in this field of study and excited to support its growth in law schools across the country.

On behalf of the students, faculty, and staff from Georgetown and Harvard, we hope you enjoy your experience at the Summit. Your visit includes opportunities to tour FDA—the chief regulator of most of the US food supply including imports, most shellfish, and other non-meat and poultry foods; USDA—the champion and resource for US agriculture and the chief regulator of meat, poultry, and catfish; DC Central Kitchen—a nationally recognized community kitchen that recycles food and uses it as a tool to train unemployed adults by providing meals for thousands of people; and UDC Urban Farm—a multi-functional, three acre farm with community garden beds, aquaponics, walking trails, community art, and playspace. We want to give a big thank you to Victoria Girard, Maryangel Rodriguez, Johan Marulanda, and the GULC events staff from Georgetown University Law Center and Erika Dunyak and Najeema Holas-Huggins from the Harvard Law School Food Law and Policy Clinic for their work to make this event happen. And thanks to the National Food Law Student Network Executive Committee for their work in organizing and planning the Summit. Lastly, a special thanks to our generous funders—the Charles M. Haar Food and Health Law and Policy Fund and GRACE Communications Foundation—and event sponsors—the Food and Drug Law Institute, Hogan Lovells, and the Animal Welfare Institute.

The Summit is an opportunity to learn, meet new friends, and consider where you fit into the study of food law and policy. With each passing year, law students, faculty, and our schools are increasingly called upon to help our nation, communities, and citizens address vital issues of food production and food access, environmental protection, and social justice. Please enjoy your stay and let us know if there is anything we can do to make it more rewarding.

National Food Law Student Network

The National Food Law Student Network (FLSN) is a collaboration of law students from around the country dedicated to promoting the study and practice of food law and related fields. Following the inaugural Food Law Student Leadership Summit in 2015, participants launched FLSN in recognition of the growing interest in food law and policy and the need to connect students and professionals with a passion for this field. FLSN continues to act as a resource for law students around the country and help organize annual Summits in collaboration with the Harvard Food Law and Policy Clinic.
